I. SUPERVISION GUIDELINES

A. Supervision During Episodes of Seclusion or Restraint

1. Title If a patient is placed in seclusion (kept alone in a room) or restraint (held with equipment or by staff), they must always be watched 1:1 (one-on-one) or 2:1 (two-on-one). This is required, no matter what level of supervision they had before.
2. If the patient was already on Enhanced Supervision, staff must write the start and end time of the seclusion or restraint on the Enhanced Supervision Flowsheet. While the patient is in seclusion or restraint, staff must also fill out the Emergency Seclusion or Restraint Flowsheet.
3. An order for Enhanced Supervision cannot be stopped just because the patient was in seclusion or restraint. Once the patient is released, they must go back to the supervision level ordered prior to seclusion, unless the practitioner changes the order. Staff must return to using the Enhanced Supervision Flowsheet once the patient is out of seclusion or restraint.

B. Supervision After Transfer Between Units or Facilities

1. When a patient is first admitted or transferred from another unit, the practitioner must review the type and level of supervision the patient had at the previous unit or facility.
2. If a patient on Enhanced Supervision is being transferred to a correctional facility, the social worker (or another assigned staff) must:
 - Tell the Sheriff's Deputy and the medical/mental health staff at the correctional facility about the patient's supervision needs.
 - Give this information both verbally and in writing on the Discharge Plan Details form.
 - Include the patient's supervision status, the reasons for supervision, and (if needed) recommend that law enforcement keep the supervision until the patient can be checked by medical staff.

- Document this communication in a progress note in the medical record
3. Oregon State Hospital is not responsible for patients admitted to outside facilities (such as medical hospitals). In those cases, patients must follow that facility's rules and guidelines.
